Introduction:

As the rate of wooden grain elevator de-commissioning and demolition accelerated in Saskatchewan during the 1990s, public attention came to focus increasingly on the dwindling number of these unique structures. Elevator closures and rail line abandonment became inextricably linked to questions of economic viability in many of Saskatchewan's small communities. Rural residents in particular became more and more uneasy as these long-familiar landmarks - country elevators - began to disappear at an accelerating rate.

In an attempt to develop some useful information on the number of elevators still in use in the province at the close of the century, the Saskatchewan Heritage Foundation contracted Maureen Pedersen in 1999 to compile a listing of all remaining licensed country elevators. The information collected became the basis of a research report distributed publicly in 2000. The number of active elevators at this time (supplemented with some inactive ones known to still exist) was approximately 800.

By the province's 100th anniversary year of 2005, it was clear that a considerable number of wooden elevators had been lost since the earlier study was undertaken, and public interest had not diminished. As a centennial project, the Foundation decided to commission a second study that would compile information on all known remaining grain elevator structures, including those located on farms, as well as the larger modern steel and concrete terminals that emerged in the late 1970s. This research would form the basis of a comprehensive database that could be modified in the future as new information was received. Ray Ambrosi was engaged to undertake this work, and by July of 2006 his computerized list comprised a total of 543 structures, including 43 of the newer terminals. By the close of 2009, the list of known wooden grain elevators in the province had declined to approximately 420.

The Heritage Foundation would like to acknowledge all of those who assisted in this phase of the elevator project. In particular, recognition is due to Gordon Lariviere whose unique knowledge of the remaining wooden elevators in Saskatchewan and the prairie west is unrivalled. Mr. Lariviere's ability to provide clarification in instances where the record was not clear and to recommend additional sources to consult was of great assistance in completing this project. As well, staff of the Heritage Resources Branch of the Ministry of Saskatchewan Tourism, Parks, Culture and Sport supported the project in a variety of ways that helped move it forward to completion.

Working with Heritage Resources Branch, the Heritage Foundation is committed to maintaining an electronic listing of the remaining elevator structures in the province. Additional elevators will be added to the database as they are identified, and demolitions will be noted as information on them is obtained. It is anticipated that interest in these landmark structures will remain high among provincial residents and others well into the 21st century.
